FIGHTS FOUR ON BRIDGE CAR.

CAPT. DEVANNEY CLOSE TO A STEVE BRODIE PLUNGE.

His Billy Left Behind, He Has a Few Warm Minutes-Guard and Motorman Powerless to He'p Him but With a Passenger's Leip He Lands the Scrappy Quartet.

Capt. Mike Devanney of the Bridge police started for the Manhattan end of the Bridge tust after 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon, accompanied by his lone sleuth, McGauley They were going to look for pickpockets in the crush. While they were waiting for an elevated train Devanney remembered that he had left his billy in the station house and sent McGauley back for it, telling the detective to meet him at the other side of the Bridge. Then the captain boarded a train and stood at the front door of the motor car.

When two bells had been rung in all cars except the one forward, five big men came running down the stairs to catch this shuttle train. Four of them got on the train platform, but the gate slammed before the fifth reached it.

Open that gate," said one of the four. The guard didn't obey, for all the signals had been given by that time and the motorman was putting on the power. "Against the rules." said the guard

Step in the car, gentlemen." One of the four slapped the guard in the face and the rest reviled him. Capt. Devanney cursed his luck in having forgotten his billy, for he saw that the four not only would fight but wanted to. He stepped out on the platform and told them to go inside. One of them made a slam at him and he saw that there was nothing to it all but a scrimmage.

The captain is a husky person of nerve. He grabbed two of the fellows and they went to the floor with him, when the others tripped him. He got strangle holds on the two that were down, but their companions beat and kicked and shoved him until his head stuck out beneath the chains Below he could see the ties, with enough space between them to allow a body to fall to the East River, a cool but invigorating

It looked as though he was about to make it, but he determined that he would have company on the descent. He got no help from the guard.

In the rush hours the shuttle trains are run on cable and the headway is so short hat the guards have to keep an eye on the brakes to prevent collisions. This particular guard, James Strimpson, could do nothing for Devanney. If he had stopped the train there might have been a collision from the rear, so he prayed for the doughty captain and yelled to the motorman, equally helpless, to lose no time.

Help did come, however, in the person of an able but anonymous citizen, who rushed out of the car and smashed at the men who were smiting Devanney. Neither the citizen nor the guard knew who Devanney was.

The six were at it bing bang all the way across the river. Devanney was getting the makings of a black eye and his collar was torn off, but occasionally from the bottom of the mêlée he managed to bang a head against the ironwork or crack an ear with his large fist. The train drew into the Manhattan terminal with the pugilistic handicap still being run, honors al most even.

As the train stopped Policeman Harry Smith jumped aboard, recognized Devanney and laid about him properly with his club. The scrap was transferred to the platform and attracted the attention of the crowd across the way.

The next train, a minute later, brought McGauley with the billies, and then there was nothing to it. Devanney seized two of the men and Smith and McGauley each collared one and started down the stairs with them. Devanney's prisoners tried to the steps, dragging the captain with them. He wouldn't let go, and at last the four fellows, all husky Irishmen, were taken to the Oak street station.

They said they were Pat Eagan of 264 West 117th street, Pat Mally of 538 West Thirty-ninth street. Hugh Smith of 527 West Forty-eighth street and James Manning of 555 West Twenty-ninth street, all laborers. They were charged with disorderly conduct, assaulting an officer and resisting arrest. If that isn't enough the guard will prefer a charge of assault.

The heroic citizen, who perhaps saved Capt. Devanney from a Steve Brodie act, refused to tell his name.

to the Longworths is exciting much comment, from the fact of her reported engagement to the young Congressman, Nick Longworth. Farly in the morning Mr. Longworth boarded an outgoing train and met Miss Roosevelt at Loveland, 30 miles above Cincinnati. They left the train at Torrence Road, five miles out of town, to clude a large crowd which had collected at the station to see Miss Roosevelt. Another crowd had collected at Torrence Road, but Mr. Longworth and Miss Roosevelt avoided them by leaving the train by one of the rear cars. MRS. DAWSEY OUTSTARED THEM. A Gang of Men Tried in Vain to Look Her Out of Countenance.

Mrs. Lina Dawsey, who owns a cottage in Main street, Tottenville, Staten Island, and a gang of pole men employed by the New York and New Jersey Telephone Company spent two hours last evening trying to stare each other down. Mrs. Dawsey won. The gang has been erecting poles to replace a line that is worn out. In replacing one near Mrs. Dawsey's home they chose a new spot which brought the pole close to her front door instead of at the far end of her property. At 6 o'clock last night they had the hole dug and started to haul the pole to position. When she saw this Mrs. Dawsey forbade the erection of the pole. The men disregarded her protests, and Mrs. Dawsey took a chair from her front porch and placed it over the hole and sat down on it.

The pole men to the number of five under direction of their foreman, sat down on the butt of the pole and attempted to outstare the woman, but after two hours of this it grew dark and the pole erectors withdrew. Mrs. Dawsey then hired a man to watch the hole during the night, with instructions to call her if any hostile move was This morning she will resume her

IN ANOTHER WOMAN'S NAME. Photographer's Model Arrested at the Imperial, Where She Had Goods Sent.

Dora Robertson, 26 years old, of 29 Bridge street, Brooklyn, a model for photographers, was charged in the Jefferson Market police court yesterday with attempted larceny. Magistrate Moss beld her in $500 bail for examination.

The young woman selected, it is alleged a hat valued at $10.50 and a walking suit at $32.50 in a Twenty-third street department store.

"Please send these to Mrs. De Witt C. Wheeler, Imperial Hotel," was her order to the saleswoman.

The saleswoman, becoming suspicious told the floorwalker and James Casey, the store detective. After sending the goods to the hotel, the floorwalker and Casey, accompanied by two detectives, hurried to the Imperial. There they found the young woman in the reception room. When she spied the floorwalker, they say she started to leave the hotel. Casev stopped her. "Your packages are in the baggage room, iss Wheeler," he said. After some hesitation she answered:

"Oh. I'll leave them until to-morrow."

Mrs. De Witt C. Wheeler then appeared.
She declared the goods had not been ordered by herself or her husband. She said that the young woman had been employed by Mr. Wheeler to pose for photographic

AGAINST HARVABD ALLIANCE.

Alumni of Massachusetts Institute of Technology Will Plock by Themselves. Boston, June 2.-By a large majority the alumni of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology have declared against the proposed agreement for an alliance with Harvard University. Ballots were sent to all former students at Tech and the polls were closed May 31. To-night the result of the ballot was made public. Of 1,809 votes cast by graduates, 458 favored the alliance and 1,351 opposed it. Of 1,060 non-graduates voting, 376 favored the plan and 684 opposed.

From an analysis of about 500 letters received by the alumni executive committee. the minority favoring the alliance believe Miss Alice Roosevelt in Cincinnatt to that the income from the Gordon-McKay fund would relieve the financial condition of the institute. The majority find that of the institute. PLAYED AS THEATER BURNED.

COOLNESS OF ACTORS AND AUDI. ENCE AVERTS PANIC.

The Orchestra Kept Up Music as the Auditors Left-intense Excitement Behind Scenes-One Pittsburg Playhouse Destroyed and Another Buined by Fire.

PITTSBURG, June 2 .- The Avenue Theater, in Fifth avenue, was destroyed by fire this evening, while its running mate and historic side partner, the Grand Opera House, under the same roof, was ruined. That loss of life did not result from the fire was due to the coolness of the audience and the actors and the attachés of the house. Almost every seat in the Grand was occupied. W. A. Mortimer and Miss May Duryea were presenting a sketch, "The Imposter." They were nearing the close when smoke began entering the building. It was discovered by Miss Duryea, who became alarmed, but was reassured by Mortimer. One by one the audience began to leave. The curtain descended, but those in the rear of the house, who knew that there was a fire, kept up the applause. The curtain went up several times and the performers bowed.

Again and again the encore was repeated, although it was necessary for Mortimer to support Miss Duryea, who tried to present a smiling face. The orchestra played on. "It's only a scare," was whispered about as many of the auditors left their seats. In the entrance women stopped at the check room for their hats and coats, put them on, and adjusted them before the mirrors.

When the greater part of the audience had left the theater there were others who insisted upon remaining. It was only then that they were informed of their great danger. The crowd, small by this time, hurried from the building. Almost the last to leave was a party of young girls in one of the boxes. They thought it was It is reported that this note, which will all a joke. Two of them fainted after they learned of the danger through which they had passed.

Behind the scenes there was intense excitement. Even while the curtain was going up and down in response to the encores and the orchestra was playing, the performers were dragging their wardrobes from the burning building. No one waited to dress in street clothes. Mortimer and Miss Duryea were the last to leave the stage the latter in a fainting condition.

The flames, which had started in the gridiron of the Avenue, supposedly from a crossed electric wire, spread rapidly In a few moments the Avenue was a mass of flames. Fortunately the firemen were able to fight it from all sides and soon a score of streams were playing on the building. Inside of an hour after the fire was discovered the Avenue was in ruins.

A thick fire wall was the only thing that | part in the attempt on the King's life. It is saved the Grand from total destruction. The roof of the Grand fell through into the auditorium, carrying with it tons of débris and thousands of gallons of water. The interior decorations and furnishings were destroyed.

Assistant Fire Chief Robert McKinley was badly cut across the face by falling glass. Several stage hands, overcome by smoke, were carried from the building and removed to places of safety by the firemen.

CALL FOR A TEST VOTE. After Mr. Schiff had finished his speech, Mr. Krech moved that a supplemental report which recommended that the question of changing the methods of insurance business be referred to a committee to be made up of the president, first vice-president and second vice-president, be appended to the original Frick report and voted on at the same time. of this board has been giving its proceedings to the press," he said. He glared at Mr. Ingalls, and proceeded to make the accusation definite. He went on to rake up the Dinkelspiel matter, a twenty-year-old row in the company between Ingalls and the elder Hyde. Young Hyde's remarks were cutting.

and the elder Hyde. Young Hyde's remarks were cutting.

Ingalls rose with a general denial. His temper flared up in turn.

"Young man." be said, shaking his finger at Mr. Hyde, "whom the gods wish to destroy they first make mad!" A few minutes later he left the room, still angry.

Mr. Frick, when he left the committee room, said to the newspaper men:

"You may say absolutely that I have resigned from the board. I am a very busy man and have no further time to devote to this matter."

He added that it was unnecessary for him to state his reasons. "It is," he added, "sufficient that I have resigned."

HABRIMAN'S BAGE.

HABRIMAN'S BAGE.

Mr. Harriman was in a rage when he left the board room. He rushed through the crowd in the corrider, elbowing his way roughly. When asked regarding the proceedings in the board room, he said:

"I know nothing about it."

Mr. Ingalls, who also left the meeting before it was concluded, was more outspoken than any of the others. He called the meeting a cat and dog fight and said that it was packed. He declared that he was disgusted with the whole affair.

"A lovely row!" he said. "They couldn't suppress that report, though. I think Hyde would give $100,000 to down it. The whole thing is a sweeping condemnation of the conduct and managemnt of the company. Everything went Hyde's way in the meeting. It was all Hyde."

Mr. Ingalls went at once to the Grand Central Station and took a 6 o'clock train for Cincinnati.

When the meeting was finally over for those who stayed to the finish Mr. Hyde and Mr. Alexander came from the board room together with one or two of their

THOSE WHO VOTED AGAINST THE REPORT.

THOSE WHO VOTED AGAINST THE REPORT Every one of the Equitable officers who are directors voted against the report. Every one of the Equitable Officers who are directors voted against the report. All nine persons against whom the committee preferred charges also voted against the report. Five of the fourteen votes cast in tavor of the report were, of course, by members of the Frick committee, Mr. Frick, Mr. Harriman, Mr. Bliss, Mr. Ingalls and Brayton Ives. D. O. Mills and James J. Hill, who were originally members of the committee, but refused to serve, also probably voted for the report. That accounts for seven of the fourteen votes. It was said last night that the source of the alleged Harriman conspiracy to obtain control of the Equitable would be found in the struggle to prevent George J. Gould from obtaining money from the Equitable for his Western railway deals. Allied with Mr. Harriman in this fight against Gould, it was declared, was Mr. Frick as representing A. J. Cassatt and the Pennsylvania system. This Mr. Frick denied when a Sun reporter saw him.

Hyde's Chance, says a Lawyeb.

HYDE'S CHANCE, BAYS A LAWYEB.

A lawyer who has been active in the whole trouble had this to say:
"Mr. Harriman and the security manufacturers in the board supported Mr. Hyde facturers in the board supported Mr. Hyde as long as they could make use of him. They had to do so because the society is loaded with their bonds, and these must be supported. A hostile management in the Equitable would break down their market. Their plan was to keep Mr. Hyde in control and to control him by shutting their eyes to his uses of the society's funds and by letting him share in their underwriting profits.

"This was easy until the exposure of Mr. Hyde by Mr. Alexander and the policyholders' committee opened a way to dispose of him. Then the Harriman supporters conceived the scheme of dumping Hyde and beemirching Alexander and Tarbell making that the expuse for outing ers conceived the scheme of dumping Hyde and besmirching Alexander and Tarbell, making that the excuse for ousting all three. If that could be done, they would be left in control. Think of the nerve they had in condemning Alexander and Hyde for being interested in the sales of bonds to the society, when the society holds over one hundred millions of their securities! They overreached this time.

"At last Mr. Hyde has found Harriman out. Every one knew he would sconer or later, but who could have foreseen that he would realize the truth in time to save himself and defeat Harriman's schemes? Now Hyde has the one great opportunity of his life. He is free from the Harriman influence, and if he is well advised he can save the Equitable and reestablish himself. If he clings to his stock control his case is hopeless. He would be certain to lose in the end, for the aroused public sentiment cannot be long resisted.

"If he insists on dominant control through his stock the Legislature will make a public investigation, the one thing most dangerous for him, if he can only see it; but if Mr. Hyde would be wise enough to concede to the policyholders the right to vote, and himself propose real mutualization, I believe every man who holds a policy would recognize Mr. Hyde as a big man after all, and would favor a most liberal compensation to him for the loss of his stock control. The salvation of the society is in his hands to-day, and I have an idea that Mr. Hyde situation.

CHINESE EXCLUSION IN BOSTON. Protest to the President Against Treating the Better Class the Same as Coolles. Boston, June 2 .- The refusal of the immigration officials here to allow three Chinese brothers of the name of King and their sister to land from a Liverpool steamship until they had complied with the regulations regarding photographs and bonds has used some of the leading cotton mill men of New England to address an energetic protest to President Roosevelt.

The kings have been completing their educations in England during the last three years, the men studying at King's College and the woman being under tutors. They are said to belong to a wealthy and cultured Chinese family, their uncle being Governor of the Province of Shanghai. They had passports and a letter of introduction from Ambassador Choate, but these documents made no difference to the im-migration people here when they arrived migration people here when they arrived yesterday and they did not get ashore until to-day, when the photographs had been taken and bonds furnished. The four Chinese desired to see something of the United States before continuing on their way to China.

The cotton mill people see nothing but harm to their business in subjecting Chinese of the better class to the same treatment as coolies, so they addressed a letter to President Roosevelt of which the following s a part: We unde understand that the Chinese Govern-We understand that the Chinese Government claims that such exclusion is contrary to its treaty rights, and if so the assumption by our officials to decide questions involved adversely to their claim seems highly unjust. We are informed that the action of our Government in subjecting Chinese noblemen and merchants to the same treatment to which coolies have been subjected is leading Chinese gilds to plan a boycott against American goods.

gilds to plan a beycott against American goods.

The cotton manufacturers in New England and the South, who have with great efforts established a large and profitable trade in China, consider in this action of our Government the most serious danger threatening their business. In the cause of justice to citizens of a friendly nation and the interests of our own people, we respectfully request that pending the settlement of the legal questions involved and the conclusion of a new treaty, our department's interpretation of the existing treaty rights be not enforced.

The Truth about Whiskey.

The government stamp on bottled-in-bond whiskey only guarantees that the whiskey is at least four years old and one hundred proof: the quality may be good, bad or indifferent, according to the way the whiskey is made. The best guarantee on a bottle of whiskey is the Sitsonis label. "Straight" (bottled in bond) or "blended" Sitionis Pure Rye Whiskey is always good, always pure, always made of the best raw material by the most careful process, and it is never anything but Staris Pure Rye Whis-
